MEMORANDUM TO HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

SUBJECT: Federal Executive Institute

The critical importance of our Federal programs demands the highest level of talent in our career leadership. To increase the capacity of top civil service executives and professionals, I directed Civil Service Commission Chairman John Macy last year to take steps to establish an advanced study center. Today I have approved and announced the creation of such a center to be known as the Federal Executive Institute and to be located at Charlottesville, Virginia in collaboration with the University of Virginia.

This new training enterprise is a part of our joint effort to improve the quality of Government for the American people. I ask you and your associates to support this new program fully and enthusiastically. Its successful operation can be assured by the assignment of your most talented and promising people to the programs it will offer.

Office of the White House Press Secretary

THE WHITE HOUSE

President Johnson announced today the establishment of a center for advanced study for top civil service executives at Charlottesville, Virginia. The new center, designated the Federal Executive Institute, will be open next October at Charlottesville in collaboration with the University of Virginia.

The program at the Institute will be conducted by the Civil Service Commission which was directed last year by the President to establish such a center as a part of a general improvement in training programs for Federal employees.

The Institute will offer top career level executives intensive courses designed to bring greater effectiveness to the administration of Government programs. Studies at the Institute will focus primarily on three areas of vital importance:

- the major problems facing our society and the nature of the government's response to those problems;
- ways of maximizing Government organizations to increase the effectiveness of programs;
- ways in which administration of Federal programs can be improved.

The Institute will be established within authorities already granted by the Congress through the Government Employees Training Act of 1958. Operating costs will be shared by the departments and agencies using the Institute. It will supplement training programs now established for Federal employees and will be directed largely at those employees in the top three levels (GS-16 and above, or equivalent) of the Civil Service.

Once the Federal Executive Institute is in full operation, it will accommodate sixty persons in an eight-week class with at least five classes to be held each fiscal year. Federal departments and agencies will be encouraged to assign only their ablest people -- those who will benefit most from this program of training, and who can be expected to make the greatest contribution to Government in the years ahead.

The Institute, under the leadership of the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, and an advisory board, will call upon leaders in the academic community, in Government, and in private enterprise to assist in providing top career executives the best training possible.

The location of the Institute at Charlottesville will permit close and constructive relationship with the administration, students and faculty of the University of Virginia. Discussions are underway with President Edgar F. Shannon, Jr. of the University about the long range plans for the Institute and its relation to the University. Initially, the Institute will be housed in temporary leased quarters a short distance from the University campus.
